

Flamingo Rock Band

Fleet Centre

Review: Toni McKenzie

The Flamingo Rock Band gave a wonderful performance on Saturday night. The audience loved them. They clapped and stamped to the music all night. The more the audience clapped and stamped, the harder the band played. Snuff the drummer made his drumsticks flash like lightning streaks. And Ron Viper played the guitar so fast that a string snapped. When the loose string swung up and swiped his nose, he just flicked the string away like a horse flicks a fly. Key and Kate sang all the band's favourite songs. Sometimes the words were hard to hear because the audience were making such a noise. However, nobody seemed to mind.

If you feel like clapping and stamping to some good music, then I would recommend the Flamingos' next performance at the Fleet Centre on June 12.

